Research and Education

Education:

Financial education is increasingly important, and not just for investors. It is becoming essential for the average family trying to decide how to balance its budget, buy a home, fund the children's education and ensure an income when the parents retire.

For emerging economies, financially educated consumers can help ensure that the financial sector makes an effective contribution to real economic growth and poverty reduction. But financial literacy is also crucial for more developed economies, to help ensure consumers save enough to provide an adequate & alternate income in retirement.

The level of financial literacy tends to vary according to education and income levels, but the evidence shows that highly educated consumers with high incomes can be just as ignorant about financial issues as less educated, lower income consumers.

Countries are increasingly aware of the importance of financial education and are already providing a variety of financial education programmes, ranging from Web sites and pamphlets or brochures to training courses, seminar & webinar, Learning Video, technical & fundamental analysis, Print & social media and media campaigns. They cover issues such as credit, insurance, investment and retirement saving.

The strongest benefits of financial education are seen when participants complete a program that induces real, positive behavioural change in financial matters. The research-backed benefits of financial education include having less debt, being able to manage household finances more skilfully, making well-informed investment decisions that will produce higher personal net worth, and a myriad of other habits that promote a happier life.

Research & Analysis:

Stock Market Analysis is a method in which the investors and traders make buying and selling decisions by studying and analysing data history and present data. It allows the investors to understand the security that a stock can provide, before investing in it. By using stock market analysis, investors and traders can reach buying and selling decisions faster.

Research entails systematic collection of information about the activities, characteristics, and outcomes of programs, services, organizations and communities.

Research activities, which may include needs assessment, quality improvement, monitoring, and evaluation, are undertaken to inform organizational direction, develop programs and refine services.

So, it's always good to know how you measure against your competitors. Market research finds out just where you are and then, according to the results, you can take action to change perception.

Research bridges the gap between a product or service and the consumer or target market. The insights gained through market research help the manufacturer or service provider to create a product or service solution that caters to the specific needs of the target market.

Thus, Conducting research is one of the best ways of achieving investor satisfaction, reducing investor churn and elevating business.
